

Keep the ban on using cellphones on commercial airlines. I'm a weekly business traveler using commercial airlines and trains. It is very annoying to have to listen to yakkers on long distance trips. There is no where to go while in the air to avoid listening to people who talks especially long and loud. If a cellphone user wants to make a call private, he or she will head right into the lavatory and can talk for hours. Can you imagined having to queue up to use a lavatory on a long distance flight because they are all in use. I have encountered that situation several times. The line sometime were seven deep. On the trains, I have encountered teens downloading cellphone ringtones and playing them during the entire trip. Very annoying, but at least I can moved to another seat. Keep the ban on cellphone usage on commercial planes.
